Some Remarks on "Industrial Neighhorliness" Suggested by an Utterance of William Allen White—How to Be a Native Foreigner.

One of the best known writers in the United States is William Alies White and one of the most remarkable things atoms Mr. White is the locally to the remarkable things atoms Mr. White got in the time to remark the time was born. That term is furnish to the remarkable got in the broads to describ and Emporial is got consult to the furnish the form. He windfastly to furnes to describ his home town not an to a targe with the home town not an to a targe with the sould that every consultation of the shall be such that every most in the open to Mr. White in almost to got the White in almost the open to Mr. White in almost the described forth cash the them is being about forth cash the three beautiful me butter to all these benefits. These things are on sale at the focal stores. When you send away for small things though your money does not get outside the United States, you are sending to a foreign country so far as your own community is concerned, for the meney won't come tack.

Withirm Aften White, who elects to live in a small city because he believes that furnant happiness is best conserted in small cities, strikes the keynore of the present crusside for home trade what he declares that a man who have his goods away from home "Is suching thefrestrial blood out of the town and gives none back." ing the name under which the C. E. Ellis Publishing company of New York city has carried on an extensive mail order business for several years.

The evidence upon which the department stopped this concern from using the United States mails shows that the firm published several cheap prepers centualing curious so called puzzle contests. These who won prizes were required to send a dollar for subscription to one of the papers and to enter cost of packing and mailing the prize. The postoffice department claims that the prizes were never worth as much as a dollar.

Schemes like this for deluding the unthinking reader undoubtedly serve to draw away from the country the tricts and the smaller towns many delars which might be expended at home in much better purpose. So expended they would beneat not only the sponder, but the local citizen with whom the money was spent, and incidentally the whole community would be hencefited by having more each in circulation.

While the postoffice department usually runs down such schemes and squelches then in the course of thus, the promoters as a rule, get miniceasy dallars before they are checked. As Abratom Lincoln might say, this reminds us of a story.

Once there was a man fishing in a pond with a great number of hooks carrying but which was fortished to the grace have. The hig catten, who was monarch of the pond, suiffed at the built and turned tail.

"The field and game warden will get that feller mighty noon," said the est. "That tens be replied the big est, who was a side artible houself. "but before the warden gets fain a whose lot of these artic suckers are going to bite that ball."
